Task 5: Create a strategy report (PDF) summarizing your entire blogging and content strategy project.

Over the past six weeks, I've had the opportunity to develop hands-on experience with blogging, content strategy, SEO, branding, and analytics through CosmiCode's Summer Internship Program, which took place from the end of June to August.

To develop our blogs, to check if we have understood what we have learnt from the first two weeks, we had to choose a niche- for which, my chosen niche — mental health awareness — which led to the creation of an original content strategy for an imaginary digital-first mental wellness brand named PsychMind Haven, which focuses on supporting students and young adults by providing practical, relatable, and evidence-informed mental health content. This report outlines my complete strategy — including a content calendar, blog creation, SEO integration, repurposing methods, and distribution plan.

This report is a culmination of my six-week internship journey at CosmiCode, where I explored the fundamentals and advanced strategies of blogging and content creation. I applied everything I learned through a personal brand project called PsychMind Haven — a fictional mental health platform aimed at helping students and young adults through blog-driven content, tools, and community engagement, ensuring to debunk the common desi myths surrounding their mental health and academic pressure, and what it means to be considered a successful person.

Week-by-Week Highlights

Week 1: Blogging Fundamentals (Beginner)

In the initial week, I learned the following things:

- The foundations of blogging: purpose, structure, and style.
- Moreover, I chose Mental Health Awareness as my niche and created an idea bank of 10 blog topics, which included the following:
 - 5 Myths About Mental Health We Need to Stop Believing
 - Signs You Might Be Burnt Out (And What to Do About It)
 - How to Support a Friend Who's Struggling with Anxiety
 - Journaling for Mental Clarity: 7 Prompts That Actually Work
 - Understanding High-Functioning Depression
 - Why Gen Z Is Talking More About Mental Health (And That's a Good Thing)
 - Digital Detox: How Your Mind Benefits from Logging Off
 - Dealing with Academic Pressure Without Burning Out
 - Social Media & Self-Worth: What the Research Says
 - Therapy Isn't Just for Crisis: Here's Why It Helps Everyone
- Soon, I drafted my first blog post, for this internship, on Why Blogging Still Matters in 2025.
- Then, I drafted a listicle blog post, of any five productivity apps that can be used by students for their studies.

- Gained confidence in writing with clarity and emotional impact, ensuring that I was ready for week 2 tasks.

Week 2: Niche Selection & Content Planning (Beginner-Intermediate)

The objective for the second week was to learn and understand how to select a blog niche and plan a content strategy based on the selected niche. Thus, I learnt and did the following:

- For our first task, we had to select a blogging niche and write a 200-word justification for our choice; so I selected the niche of Mental Health Awareness, with the below being my justification of selecting this niche;

“Choosing Mental Health Awareness as my niche for blogging, as it’s one of the most crucial and under-discussed aspects of one’s well-being among students, young adults, and Gen Z. In today’s fast-paced world, where burnout, anxiety, and emotional exhaustion are common but rarely spoken about openly, I want to create content that feels real, validating, and helpful—to make others inform that mental health is equally important as physical health, if not more important than that.

Combining my interest in psychology, along with my writing skills, this niche allows me to develop content that supports, educates, and connects with people. I aim to normalize mental health conversations, share coping strategies, and encourage readers to take their emotional health seriously without feeling any sort of shame.

The blog will be aimed at young people who might be navigating stress, self-doubt, or simply feeling overwhelmed by life. Through personal storytelling, research-based posts, and resource guides, I aim to make mental health feel less like a taboo and more like a conversation, something that should have been done all those years ago.”

- Then, next, using the selected niche from the first task, we had to draft a weekly content calendar of any five blog topics for our chosen niche.
- Then, we had to do our research and find 10 relevant keywords using free tools, such as Google Keyword Planner, and the following are the ten keywords relevant to my niche:
 - Mental health awareness
 - Mental journaling
 - Exhaustion
 - Digital detox
 - Journal prompts
 - Overthinking and mental fatigue
 - Burnout symptoms in students
 - Social media and mental health
 - Social media anxiety and how to deal with it
 - How to deal with burnout
- Furthermore, we then had to write a blog post, of around 500 words, using 2–3 of those relevant keywords. So I chose to write a blog on “Burnout Is Real: How to Recognize It and Start Healing”.

- For our final task, we had to create a content pillar strategy outline for three main topics, with five subtopics, for each of the three main topics.

Week 3: SEO & Content Optimization (Intermediate)

The objective for this week was to learn how to make blogs SEO-friendly and rankable. To understand this, I learnt the following things in the third week of this internship:

- This week introduced SEO — making blogs discoverable and rankable on search engines, so I studied on-page SEO. Then, using this, I wrote a 600-word SEO-optimized blog: How Academic Stress Impacts Mental Health (And How to Cope). The following are the key elements of On-Page SEO:
 - Title Tags
 - Meta Descriptions
 - Keyword Research and Placement
 - Proper use of H1, H2, H3 headings
 - Alt-text for Images
 - Mobile Optimization

After drafting the How Academic Stress Impacts Mental Health (And How to Cope), for my third task, I had to fact-check whether this blog had all the key elements of On-Page SEO or not, and the result was as below:

Element	Status	Notes
Title Tag	Present	Includes target keyword “ academic stress ” and is within ideal length
Meta Description	Present	158 characters, includes keyword + clear CTA
Keyword Usage	Good	Primary keyword used in title, meta, intro, and body
Headings (H1, H2, H3)	Used correctly	H1 for blog title, H2s for sections, H3s for tips
URL Structure	Not tested	-
Internal Links	Missing	-
External Links	Missing	-
Image Alt Text	Missing	-
Mobile Optimization	Assumed	-
Readability	Strong	Clear tone, logical flow, scannable structure

- Did my research and generated 10 SEO-friendly blog title ideas based on keyword searches, and I chose these ten titles:
 - 9 Signs You’re Experiencing Academic Burnout (And How to Recover)
 - Social Media & Anxiety: How Scrolling Is Impacting Your Mental Health
 - How to Set Boundaries Without Feeling Guilty (Especially with Friends)
 - Journaling for Mental Clarity: 7 Prompts to Process Your Emotions
 - Overthinking Everything? Here’s How to Calm Your Brain Down

- What Emotional Exhaustion Feels Like (And How to Spot It Early)
 - The Link Between Academic Pressure and Student Mental Health
 - Affirmations That Work: Rewriting Your Inner Narrative
 - 5 Mental Health Apps Gen Z Is Actually Using in 2025
 - Why It's Okay to Take a Break (Even If You Think You Shouldn't)
- For our final task of this week, we had to draft a blog using the content optimization checklist, so I wrote on “Overthinking Everything? Here’s How to Calm Your Brain Down”.

Week 4: Content Strategy for Brands Content Strategy for Brands (Intermediate-Advanced)

In the fourth week, after learning about why blogging matters in 2025 (from the first week), I have understood one major thing from this week- blogs don’t just inform — they connect brands with audiences and strengthen credibility when paired with distribution.

- Learned how brands use blogs to connect with their audience, and using what I understood, I wrote a brand storytelling blog for my imaginary brand, and introducing its mission, PsychMind Haven; a mental wellness space for students and young adults, offering relatable blogs, coping tools, and community support, all while raising awareness about the importance of mental health, particularly within the desi community.
- Then, for my second task of this week, I created a 3-month content plan with topic variety and goals (SEO, engagement, awareness), which went as follows:
 - Month 1: Basics of Digital Marketing
 - Digital Marketing 101: What Every Beginner Should Know
 - 5 Social Media Mistakes Killing Your Engagement
 - SEO vs. Paid Ads: Which Is Better for Small Businesses?
 - How to Build an Email List from Scratch in 2025?
 - Month 2: Content & Social Media Strategy
 - Content Pillars: The Secret to a Consistent Brand Voice
 - Instagram Reels vs. TikTok: Where Should You Invest Your Time?
 - 7 Blog Post Ideas to Drive Organic Traffic
 - How to Write CTAs That Actually Work Wonders?
 - Month 3: Advanced Marketing Techniques
 - What Is Marketing Automation and Why Your Business Needs It
 - Case Study: How Brand X Increased Website Traffic by 200% in 3 Months
 - The Psychology of Colours in Digital Advertising
 - 5 Free Tools Every Digital Marketer Should Use in 2025
- Then, moving to the third task, I drafted CTAs for different blog types and built a blog distribution strategy; which went like this:
 - Product Blog (Mental Health App or Tool)

- "Ready to take control of your mental well-being? Download the PsychMind Haven App today and start your journey to a calmer mind! Because mental health matters as much as physical health!"
- Personal Story Blog
 - "Have you felt this way too? Share your experience with us — your experience might inspire someone else to heal."
- How-to (Tips) Blogs
 - "Don't just read about it — try these 5-minute techniques now and tell us which one worked best for you!"
- Newsletter/Resource Blog
 - "Want more tips like this? Subscribe to our weekly PsychMind Haven newsletter and get free mental health resources straight to your inbox, backed by actual research!"
- Case Study Blog
 - "Want to see results like this- the ones that people are saying has helped them to recover mentally? Learn how PsychMind Haven can help you— start here."
- For my fourth task, where I had to write a case study blog post of around 500 words, on a successful content marketing campaign- I wrote a case study analyzing Spotify Wrapped: “How Personalization Turned Data Into a Viral Marketing Win”, showing how storytelling can elevate a brand.
- And lastly, I had to prepare a distribution strategy, planning how blogs can be shared on LinkedIn, Instagram, Pinterest, and through newsletters.

Week 5: Analytics, Competitor Analysis & Repurposing (Advanced)

- By identifying the key blog performance metrics, I discovered that these metrics are a great way to make data-driven decisions, optimize content, and ultimately achieve your goals. By analyzing these metrics, you can identify trends, understand what resonates with your audience, and refine your strategy for better results.
 - So, the 5 key blog performance metrics that I feel are most important for a blogger to understand, to get their blog content high in engagement, include;
 - i. Bounce Rates
 - ii. Time on Page
 - iii. Organic Clicks/ Organic Click-Through-Rate
 - iv. Inbound Links
 - v. Social Shares
- Moving onto the next task, where I had to conduct a competitor analysis of 3 mental health blogs, which I selected: Verywell Mind, The Mighty, and Talkspace. From this task, I understood how important it is to do your research as a blogger and ensure that you are offering something that many competitors don't offer with their content, to ensure that your audience maintains a trust built relationship with your content.

- Furthermore, with the fourth task, where I had repurposed any one of my previous blogs, which I chose to go ahead with the blog I drafted for the first task of the third week, "How Academic Stress Impacts Mental Health (And How to Cope)", I learned to repurpose content into different formats:
 - Blog → Instagram carousel
 - Blog → Infographic (Canva design concept)
 - Blog → Email newsletter snippet
- Then I summarize how Google Analytics tracks performance, focusing on traffic sources, audience behaviour, and conversion, as Google Analytics is considered to be one of the most powerful tools for understanding how well their blog is performing. It provides real-time data and detailed insights into how visitors interact with your content, helping bloggers such as you make informed decisions in order to improve your reach and engagement.
- For my final task of this week, I had to build a repurposing plan for any 3 blogs I have drafted before, ensuring the same core message reaches wider audiences in creative formats. So, I chose to use these three blogs for this task:
 - i. Why Blogging Still Matters in 2025? (Week 1, Task 1)
 - ii. How Academic Stress Impacts Mental Health (And How to Cope) (Week 3, Task 1)
 - iii. PsychMind Haven: Building a Safe Space for Every Mind (Week 4, Task 1)

The key takeaway that I got from this week was that good content doesn't end with publishing — tracking, analyzing, and repurposing keep it alive and maximizes reach.

Week 6: Capstone Strategy Project (Advanced)

The sixth week was the combination of the skills that I have learnt throughout the previous five weeks, and incorporating them into this week's tasks.

- After finalizing our chosen niche, which again, I selected mental health awareness, we had to draft a 30-day blogging content calendar with blog titles, keywords, and goals, and then, using any two topics from this 30-day blogging content calendar, we had to draft a blog post on any two topics, of around 600 words. But before I go ahead with the blog post thing, after analyzing how people from social media platforms and blogging platforms set up a content calendar to maintain their consistency, I drafted a 30-day content calendar for my niche, as you can see below.

Date	Blog Title	Keyword(s)	Goal
Day 1	10 Signs of High-Functioning Anxiety You Shouldn't Ignore	High-functioning anxiety	Awareness & SEO
Day 3	How to Create a Journaling Habit That Actually Sticks	Journaling Prompts for Mental Health	Practical Tip & Engagement

Date	Blog Title	Keyword(s)	Goal
Day 7	Anxious in Social Settings? Try These 5 Grounding Tricks That Do Wonders	Social Anxiety Grounding Techniques	Engagement
Day 10	The Science of Burnout: What's Happening in Your Brain?	Burnout recovery, Stress hormones	Education
Day 13	How to Build a Realistic Self-Care Routine (That You'll Actually Follow)	Self-Care Routine Gen Z	Traffic & Shareability
Day 16	Mental Health & Exams: Study Smarter Without Burning Out	Mental Health, Exam Season	Seasonal content & SEO
Day 20	Can't Sleep? 5 Nighttime Habits That Are Making Anxiety Worse	Anxiety and Sleep	Awareness & Engagement
Day 22	How Music Affects Your Mental Health – Backed by Actual Psychology	Music therapy, Mental Health	Education
Day 26	Overthinking Everything? Here's How to Calm Your Brain Down	Overthinking, help	SEO & Shareability
Day 30	PsychMind Haven's Top Mental Health Tips of the Month	Mental Health	Community & Lead Gen

As one can see, all the topics that I have mentioned above are somewhat related to my selected niche.

- Moving on, using this content calendar, I wrote two complete blog posts with SEO elements, including the elements that must be incorporated in a blog, that I have developed the skills of from week three, first task, where I had to draft a blog post of around 600 words, and I had to include the following:
 - ❖ Title tags and meta descriptions
 - ❖ Structured headings (H1, H2, H3)
 - ❖ Organic keyword usage
 - ❖ User-friendly formatting

So, for this task, I chose to write the two blogs on these two topics because I felt like these two topics are less talked about, and many don't know much about them, due to the overwhelming trends established by social media platforms. These blogs combine personal voice, psychological insight, and actionable guidance for readers.

1. 10 Signs of High-Functioning Anxiety You Shouldn't Ignore
 2. How to Build a Realistic Self-Care Routine (That You'll Actually Follow)
- For the fourth task- Content Distribution & Repurposing; to maximize reach, I developed a distribution plan for social media and newsletters, as well as a repurposing strategy to adapt each blog into multiple formats, to ensure that the content reaches diverse audiences while staying platform-relevant:

- Repurposing Formats:
 - Instagram carousels and reels
 - Infographics
 - LinkedIn summaries
 - Newsletter snippets
 - PDF downloads

To conclude this report, I have learnt so much from this internship that I feel confident in drafting and posting a series of my blogs on the blogging platforms, creating an online presence, and building a community that understands my content and wants me to continue posting. Because as these six weeks went on, I realized that while blogging is difficult and hard, with the right techniques and giving it a unique voice that matches my personality, it can be rewarding. And I look forward to applying what I have learnt these past six weeks in the future.
